In 2009, an estimated 1.5 million people were treated at U.S. hospital emergency rooms for head injuries related to common products found inside the home. The following products are the top 20 categories contributing to the most head injuries. Thousands of additional head injuries are related to outside the house, such as driveways, porches, and workshops (not included in these statistics). Many injuries can be avoided by removing potential hazards inside the home. Secure rugs and loose electrical cords, put away toys and other products, supervise children, use safety gates, install window guards and night lights. Install grab bars and handrails if you are frail or elderly.
